Fiji Airways selects Swiss-AS as MRO software provider

Fiji Airways recently awarded its MRO software contract to Swiss-AS and will start to implement AMOS early next year. Given Fiji's geographic location, Swiss-AS is in an ideal position of being able to support Fiji Airways either from the US, or Asia-Pacific office.

The airline's management strategically decided to re-new its Maintenance & Engineering software with a state-of-the-art solution, supporting its growth plans and providing industry best-practice processes to the technical department. A further key decision factor was the high degree of integration of AMOS functions, ensuring that required maintenance data needs to be entered only once, while assuring an appropriate information flow beyond departmental boundaries.

A reference visit to a dedicated AMOS customer in Asia helped to convince Fiji Airways' evaluation team that AMOS is the most appropriate choice for a future-proof MRO software solution that will meet the needs of the current and future business as it develops.

"In addition to the pride we feel that Fiji Airways has decided on AMOS, I am sure that this beautiful destination will be an additional incentive for our consultants and trainers who will be involved in the implementation project," says Ronald Schaeuffele, CEO of Swiss-AS.

About Fiji Airways

Fiji Airways Limited is Fiji's International Airline, providing passenger and freight transport services.

In May 2012, the airline announced it would reintroduce the name Fiji Airways – formerly known as Air Pacific.

The flag carrier operates its national and international flights with a mixed fleet of 7 Boeing 737-700 and Airbus A330-200 aircraft.

From its main hub at Nadi International Airport, Fiji Airways flies to 15 cities in 10 countries. The carrier employs around 900 people and performs in-house aircraft maintenance.
